First Flight

Congratulations to Jeff and Doug on completion of and first flights of a beautiful Starduster. The Following was taken from the Biplane Forum.

It's been a long time in coming but Doug & I got our Starduster airborne for the first time yesterday. I have never flown a tail-dragger or even a homebuilt before but I had this one up for about an hour. It fly's well but I will have to get use to the stick and compared to my docile Cessna hours this one feels more like a sports car. It fly's a tiny bite right wing heavy but not enough to bother changing anything at this point. Climb is about 1000 fpm at 80 mph does about 122 mph at 2300 rpm. I did not stall it at this point as it was the first flight.

We are going to be a bit over weight when full of fuel but that's partly because the pilots are both around 235 lbs. It will be a fun machine and when we get the 25 hour time flown off on it. I am looking forward to going to some local fly-ins. I think 25 hours should give me a little confidence. Right now I'm just happy to get it up and down again safely' Thanks for all the help you gave us during our construction years.
